Good Night.

Over the meadow grass, And the gates of the sunset are open For the dying day to pass.

Good night! for the shadows lengthen

Good night! the mountains are fading, The voices of singing cease, And the twilight, gracious and tender, Is filling the valleys with peace.

Good night! for the summer is ended-Oh! the summer of sunshine and balm! With its riches of royal resplendence, Its curtains of silence and calm.

Oh! friends whose faces of smiling Have rainbowed its passage with light, Whose hearts, more warm than its pulses.

Have been a rest and a refuge-Good night! Good night! for the summer is ended-Oh! valley of quiet delight! Oh! mountains, forever unweary,

Good night! be it bravely spoken, Though song on the lip should cease-For the joy of the vanished summer

Shall fill all the winter with peace.

Forever unwandering-Good night!

Flying Mouse.

We saw, yesterday, in the possession of Mr. Davis, the proprietor of the Supreme Court Hotel, a very interesting, and, to us, very extraordinary, specimen of the genus mus, called by some who have seen it, a flying mouse. From some of its characteristics we should be led to think that this little animal comes under the denomination of the sub-genus Gerbilius of the Jerbon species, but for its extreme smallness, and the distinct peculiarity of the construction of the tail. Specimens of this species were found by Sir Thomas Mitchell on the Reedy Plains, near the junction of the Murray and the Murrumbidgee, and his description formed part of the Transactions of the Linnæan Society of London. This curious little creature is the mother of four tiny, hairless and sightless little things, about the size of a good horse-bean; they establish the fact of their being of the order mammalia very palpably, and feed away at the founts nature has provided, whilst the mother takes every care of them. The peculiarity we speak of is the tail, which resembles, and indeed is, a sort of feather, shaped like one of an ostrich tail, except that the end tapers and is straight, having a firm sort of stem down the centre, from which branches at right angles regular light feathery hair. The head is pointed, with a fringe of buff at the side of the cheek, and the breast and belly are quite white. Connected with the hinder legs—which, like all our little Australian rodents, are longer than the fore—and attached to the sides, is a sort of web, something like that of a flying squirrel. This mouse measures about two inches in the body, is of a light brown color, and the tail is two and a half inches long. The little mites of young ones have only rudimentary tails, and look very much like sucking pigs diminished to the size we have indicated. We cannot find, at present, any description in the books we have consulted, which at all applies to this extraordinary little animal. It was found, with its family, by Mr. Davis, in a hole in a piece of wood. We should really be glad if the learned in such matters wauld enlighten us on the subject .- Maryborough Advertiser, May 16.

A Secret Doom.

About two years since there was, in our or some other city, a famous doctor, into whose consultingroom crowds came daily, so that they might be healed. Now this doctor had a suspicion that there was something vitally wrong with himself, and he went to consult another famous physician at Dublin, or it may be at Edinburgh. And he of Edinburgh punched his comrade's sides, and listened at his heart and lungs, and felt his pulse, I suppose, and looked at his tongue, and when he had done, Dr. London said to Dr. Edinburgh, "Doctor, how long have I to live!" And Doctor Edinburgh said to Doctor London, "Doctor, you may last a year." Then Doctor London came home, knowing that what Doctor Edinburgh said was true. And he made up his accounts, with man and heaven, I trust. And he visited his patients as usual. And he went about healing, and cheering, and soothing, and doctoring; and thousands of sick people were benefitted by him. And he said not a word to his family at home; but lived amongst them, cheerful, and tender, and loving, though he knew the night was at hand when he should see them and work for them no more. And it was winter-time, and they saw and told him that some man at a distance-very sick, but very rich-wanted him; and, though Doctor London knew he was at death's door, he went to the sick man, for he knew that the large fee would be good for his children after him. And he died ; and his family never knew until he was gone that he had been long aware of the inevitable doom.— Cornhill Magazine for January.

Prussian Royalty a Century Ago. On January 31, 1740, he, (King Frederick William, the father of the great Frederck), said : "I am not grieved that I am about to die, for a man who is afraid of death is a coward; but what I do feel sorry for is that I should have such a scoundrel as my son for a successor." Another of his remarks was, " I know what the many bows mean; I shall some day chop off a few heads like turnips, and then it will be seen whether I or the boy am burgomaster of Berlin." One evening, when the Prince entered his father's apartments, and all the persons present rose, the King ex claimed savagely, "Sit ye down," and when the Prince did not immediately take his seat, he shouted, "Seat yourself, in the fiend's name, or go to ____." On another occasion he declared that he had only one thing to reproach himself with, namely, that he had not executed the Prince ten years back .- Weber's Gleanings of Four Cen-

Bread 1800 Years Old.

An important archæological discovery has just been made at Pompeii, of a mill with a great quantity of corn in excellent preservation, and an oven with eighty-one loaves, arranged in rows, and but slightly affected by the heat of the lava, having been protected by a quantity of ashes, which had covered the iron door, fitted to the mouth of the oven. These loaves have all been got out entire; a large iron shovel for introducing the loaves into the oven has also been found on the spot, with a remnant of its wooden handle .-Galignani.

Happiness.

Now let me tell you a secret worth knowing. This looking forward for enjoyment don't pay. From what I know of it I would as soon chase butterflies for a living, or bottle up moonshine for cloudy nights. The only true way to be happy, is to take drops of happiness as God gives arm to us every day of our lives. The boy cearn to be happy while he is plodding over its lessons; the apprentice while he is learning his trade; the Pamphlets, merchant while he is making his fortune. If he fails to learn this art be will be sure to miss the enjoyment when he gains what he sighs for.

The best thing about a girl is cheerfulness We don't care how ruddy her cheek may be, or how velvetty her lips-if she wears a scowl, even her friends will consider her ill-looking; while the young lady who illuminates her countenance with smiles will be regarded as handsome though her complexion be coarse enough to grind nutmegs on. As perfume is to the rose, so is good nature to the

Religion is like the firmament; the more one searches it the more stars are seen ; it is like the sea; the more one yiews it the more boundless

The fact that fish herd together in great flocks or nations seems now to be well-established. All the great inhabitants of the great deep, from the mighty whale down to the minnow, live in what may be termed colonies. Thus we have the term "a school of whales." We have also the young salmon in shoals—each year's growth in separate companies, and every fish as local in its dwelling-place as men are. We know, too, that the herrings live also in nations, which arrive at maturity in vast groups at different periods of the season. The same laws govern the crusteceæ. Persons who deal in shell-fish can easily tell the different localities whence they derive their various supplies. A Scotch lobster can be readily distinguished from a Norway one, and a "native" oyster differs considerably from a "scuttle-mouth." These are all points which ought long ago to have led to a better understanding of the natural and economic history of fish. This ignorance has well-nigh ruined our most valuable fisheries. We have been trading for years in the belief that the supply was inexhaustible, and are but beginning to find out that it is even possible to exhaust the sea. The German Ocean has been so long the fishing-pond of Europe, that we can scarcely wonder, considering the wealth that has been drawn from its depths, that its supplies are beginning to fail us. There can be no doubt, however, that other sources of supply will be discovered; if so, we can only hope that some method will be observed in harrying the nest, in order that the supply may be made to go as far as possible. - London Review.
